How To Get A Fair Trial By Jury

Synopsis

Justice Randolph Jackson of the New York State Supreme Court discusses the complex process of picking a jury in a criminal case. Justice Jackson takes into account a wide range of circumstances and factors, including, but not limited to, the ever-elusive human factor. This book is essential reading for legal professionals and laypersons alike, but it is especially valuable for those individuals who are facing trial or who have family members who are doing so. The many ways that race or ethnicity can influence jurors is one of the author's special concerns. This is an accessible and readable volume; but it is also a deeply knowledgeable summary of a lifetime's worth of experience with jury trials.

Mr. Jackson hits the nail on the head!! There are so many different mediums out there that try to help attorneys learn how to do a good voir dire, and many are pretty decent. This book is short sweet and is very helpful. I plan to use some of the sample questions in my jury selection. The only thing I somewhat disagree with is "bull dogging" the jurors at the beginning. I have an aggressive criminal defense style, but it is best to hold back sometimes. I think in the beginning you have to be assertive but not too aggressive. There is only one occasion to make a first impression. Jurors decide if they like you as soon as they hear your first statement as well as how presentable you have made yourself. At the end of the day a neat appearance, articulate presentation, firm posturing, and respectful style will go a long way. Well worth buying. Sidebar: it is also available to print out in its full form on the internet. It of course will not look as neat, but content is the same. Good Luck!
